While Clover was hot-blooded, paranoid, frequently stressed and aggressive, Sage was calm, patient, cool-blooded and wise. When Clover first met Sage, she immediately idealized him as the perfect male of her dreams and fell in love with him. He closely resembled Norj, her novel character (representative of herself), Thysander's, love interest.

Anyway, let's assume that all of the scenes/chapters in our novel are 2000 words long. So if we're writing a 100,000-word novel, we'll have about 50 scene/chapters in our novel. From our earlier beginning, middle and end discussion, we know that 15 of those 50 scenes are already spoken for. So we'll need to write 35 more. I know.
